That is my court room and my prosecutors and, one of the remaining nine states suing Microsoft is Minnesota where I live.

I do not believe in "sealed" settlements that allow companies to hide what they did by paying off someone and I certainly don't believe that a publicly traded company in a federal court has the right to hid sworn testimony.

There are a few million Americans out here who pay for two-thirds of the people involved (the judge and the prosecutor) and we pay for the courts themselves. I want to know what Microsoft is "swearing" to and believe that I have every right to have access to that testimony.

Thank You,
